Excerpt: ... CHAP. II. From Brufeh to Mechlin--Antwerp--Description of that City, and of its fine Paintings--"Journey to Ruremond--General Observations on Flanders--Number of Cities--Population--Trade--Manufactures--Agriculture--Situation--Political importance. JULY 20th, I left Brussels, taking the road to Mechlin in my way to Antwerp; the distance is twelve miles, through a light sandy country, not near so rich as what I had lately travelled, but their management of it seemed very good; though some of it was not cultivated at all, yet all that was under crops seemed to yield very good ones. Flax I observed to grow very well on these sands, but they manured them very richly for the preceding crop. I saw much clover that was very fine, and many fields of barley and oats that almost rivalled the products of much better soils; but I do not remember seeing one crop of wheat. They plough here with much greater dexterity than ever Vol, II. D 'I saw I saw in England; for the ploughman has no driver, although they use sour horses at a time; he has reins to all the horses, and a long coach-whip, which he sticks into a socket made on purpose to receive it in the beam of his plough: they use only wheelploughs, and the country people think that no plough in the world can equal their true Flemish one. I remarked their furrows, and found that they went very shallow; their motive for which, is keeping the good soil at top, which has been manured, and not ploughing down to the sharp sand, which has never received any improvement. On some low spots, between little sandy eminences, they plant hops, which, by means of good manuring, and much cultivation, they make a profitable crop. Mechlin is a considerable city, very well situated for communication and trade with Antwerp, Brussels,...
